Did you know?

- Red pandas are more closely related to raccoons than the black and white giant pandas.
- They have a false thumb (an extended wrist bone) which helps them climb trees.
- Like giant pandas, the major portion of a red panda's diet is bamboo. But they also eat other plants and roots, the eggs of other animals, and sometimes even small birds.
- They burn the midnight oil as they sleep a lot during the day and do most of their hunting at night.
- Approximately, 38% of the red panda's habitat is in Nepal.
